CLAUSE-BY-CLAUSE ANALYSIS

| Clause 1      | NON COMPETE                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         | HIGH |

| Clause Text   | 0) Why? Indian courts generally restrict excessive non-compete obligations after employment termination under                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |      |
| Risk Reason   | The non-compete clause may be considered restrictive and against public policy if it is overly broad or imposes an unreasonable restraint on the employee's ability to earn a living, which could lead to its invalidation by Indian courts. Indian courts have consistently held that non-compete obligations must be reasonable in scope, geography, and duration. This is in line with the principles of the Indian Contract Act 1872, which emphasizes the importance of fairness and reasonableness in contractual agreements. |      |
| Law Reference | ICA 1872 Section 27                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |      |
| Deviation     | The uploaded clause deviates significantly from the standard as it is empty and does not provide any non-compete obligation, leaving the company vulnerable to potential competition from former employees. This omission may be deemed unenforceable under Indian Contract Act 1872 Section 27, which restricts excessive non-compete obligations. The company's business interests may be at risk due to the lack of protection.                                                                                                  |      |

| Risk Reason   | The non-compete clause may be considered restrictive and potentially violate Section 27 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, which states that every agreement by which anyone is restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade or business is void. The suggested revision aims to reduce the duration and restrict the scope to confidential business activities only, which may help mitigate this risk. However, the clause may still be subject to scrutiny under Indian law.                                                                                                      |

| Deviation     | The uploaded clause deviates significantly from the standard clause, failing to specify the governing law and jurisdiction. This omission introduces uncertainty and potential risks, including conflicting laws and unclear dispute resolution. | Risk Reason   | The clause involves the use of AI models and data processing, which may raise concerns under the IT Act 2000, particularly with regards to data privacy and security. Additionally, the use of pre-trained models and local deployment may not be fully compliant with Indian data residency requirements under RERA 2016. The clause also lacks clarity on the contractual obligations and liabilities of the parties involved, which may lead to disputes under the Indian Contract Act 1872.                         |        |

| Risk Reason   | The non-compete clause is overly restrictive, as it prohibits the employee from working in a similar industry for an extended period of 5 years, which may be considered unreasonable and thus unenforceable under Indian law. This could lead to disputes and potential litigation. The clause may also be seen as a restraint of trade, which is subject to certain restrictions under the Indian Contract Act 1872.        |

| Deviation     | The uploaded clause deviates from the standard by not specifying the geographical scope and using a vague definition of 'similar industry', which may lead to ambiguity and potential over-broad application. This deviation may increase the risk of disputes and litigation under the Indian Contract Act 1872. The lack of clear protections and definitions may also impact the enforceability of the non-compete clause. |

| Risk Reason   | The provided clause appears to be a descriptive outline of a technical process for a contract analysis project, and does not contain any specific contractual obligations or terms that could be considered risky under Indian law. The clause seems to focus on the functionality and workflow of the project, rather than creating any legally binding agreements.                                                                                                                                                    |     |

| Deviation     | The uploaded clause significantly deviates from the standard by not addressing liability for damages and instead discussing project details. This deviation introduces substantial risks and lacks essential protections, potentially exposing parties to unforeseen liabilities. Under the Indian Contract Act 1872 Section 73, parties may still be liable for damages, but the uploaded clause fails to provide clear terms or limitations.                                                                          |     |

| Risk Reason   | The clause in question appears to be related to termination, which is a critical aspect of contracts in India, and its interpretation may be subject to the Indian Contract Act 1872, specifically Section 73, which deals with the compensation for loss or damage caused by breach of contract. The absence of specific details about the clause makes it challenging to assess its compliance with other relevant laws such as RERA 2016 or the Companies Act 2013. The use of AI tools like Groq API for analysis may also raise concerns under the IT Act 2000 regarding data privacy and security. |

| Deviation     | The uploaded clause deviates significantly from the standard clause, as it does not provide an internal grievance redressal mechanism, a time frame for addressing grievances, or arbitration for unresolved grievances. This deviation may lead to increased risk of litigation and disputes between the employee and the company. Under the Industrial Disputes Act 1947 Section 9C, a clear grievance redressal mechanism is essential for resolving disputes and promoting industrial harmony.                                                                                                       |

| Deviation     | The uploaded clause deviates significantly from the standard clause, failing to specify the governing law and jurisdiction for dispute resolution. | Risk Reason   | The clause involves the use of AI to analyze contracts and provide legal advice, which may be considered a form of legal practice under Indian law, potentially falling under the purview of the Bar Council of India. The system's ability to provide explanations and suggested improvements may also be seen as a form of legal opinion, which could be subject to scrutiny under the ICA 1872. Furthermore, the handling of user data and contracts may raise concerns under the IT Act 2000. |
